India's most-loved wonders

Where the world actually goes: drawn from the Archaeological Survey of India's latest visitor rankings and national tourism data — nearly 10 million international guests a year, most arriving November to March.

Taj Mahal, Agra

India's most-visited monument — nearly 7 million guests a year meet the marble at dawn. Pair with Agra Fort, itself in the national top five.

Jaipur & Rajasthan

Amber Fort, Hawa Mahal and the palace cities of Udaipur, Jodhpur and Jaisalmer — Rajasthan sits among India's top five states for foreign visitors.

Kerala's backwaters

Private houseboats, tea hills and Ayurveda — consistently rated among the world's great slow-travel experiences.

The tiger reserves

Ranthambore and Bandhavgarh offer the planet's best odds of a wild Bengal tiger sighting.

Amritsar's Golden Temple

Sikhism's holiest shrine welcomes more daily visitors than almost any site in India — and feeds them all, free.

Delhi's Mughal capital

Qutub Minar and the Red Fort draw a record 7.9 million visitors between them; add Humayun's Tomb, Jama Masjid and imperial New Delhi.

Varanasi & the Ganges

The world's oldest living city: dawn boat rides past the ghats and the hypnotic evening Ganga aarti.

Goa's coast

Aguada Fort ranks in India's ten most-visited monuments; the beaches need no introduction.

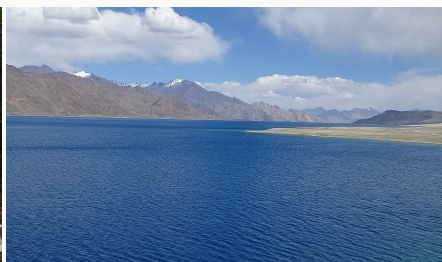

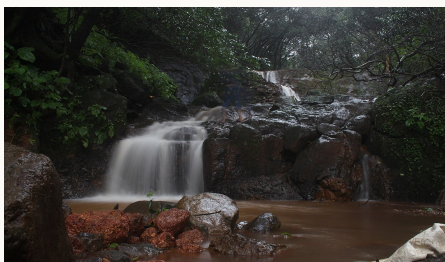

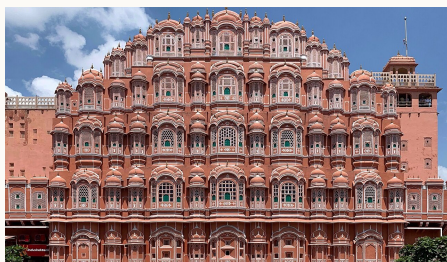

Ladakh & the high Himalaya

Khardung La, Pangong Lake and a thousand-year-old monastery culture — summer's great adventure.

Ellora, Ajanta & Konark

Rock-cut cave temples and the Sun Temple at Konark — India's 2nd most-visited monument — for lovers of ancient art.

When the world visits: December, January and February are the peak months for international arrivals — the classic dry-season window for the Taj, Rajasthan, Kerala and the tiger parks alike. The Himalaya flips the calendar: June to September is its golden season.
